

Recurrence, Region 3

A notice to field staff, regarding reports received from the public over the March survey window.

Between 1 March and the close of the reporting window, this office has logged one hundred seventy-four reports of a single recurring subject across Region 3. We publish the compiled log here under field_reports.csv, attached, without editorial comment as to veracity.

What has prompted the present bulletin is not the frequency of the reports, which is consistent with previous springs, but rather an observation made in the course of tabulating them: the reports are not arriving at random. Read carelessly, the log is a scatter of unrelated anecdotes. Read attentively, it appears to be an account of something deliberate.

What the subject is doing, we will not speculate here. We submit the log to the reader in its entirety and invite independent examination.

For the careful reader.

Several reports in the log describe vague disturbances and have not been correlated to any confirmed sighting; these should be disregarded. Those that remain appear to be situated somewhere specific — the coordinates have been preserved in each entry and may repay attention.

Submission. If, on examining the log, you find that it describes a coherent message, report your finding.
